In the art of 'imaginary flora' (see previous item), the 'Peonies' rings by Alessio Boschi are perfect illustrations. In each flower, Layer upon layer of paved petals (each with at least two different hues) host a cushion-cut gem, and pistils in white or yellow gold are glistening all around. Only known to the wearer, a ladybird has found shelter on the underside of one of the petals. It is a brilliant take on cocktail rings; all brimming with colours, they are equally lavish and charming, hot couture yet tapping into one's inner child. So just succumb to the temptation. Which one will you pick?
